ABSTRACT

The San Diego demonstration project provides occupationally oriented English as a Second Language (ESL) materials aimed at preparing students for job training, on-the-job training, or entry-level employment, mainly in semi-skilled occupations. The job-readiness curriculum is planned to bring the monolingual Spanish speaking adult student to a proficiency level in English in approximately 1,000 hours of instruction. Presented in terms of performance objectives, the course curriculum is divided into three phases: survival English, English for the world of work and selected occupational clusters, and English pattern usage. The daily lesson plans, student evaluations, and tests presented in the report are all cross-referenced to a list of these basic performance objectives. The first section of the document provides: (1) specific performance objectives, (2) student information and profiles, (3) student evaluations, (4) written and oral tests utilized, (5) materials and aids, (6) reference materials and audiovisual equipment, and (8) evaluation and recommendations. Section 2, making up the bulk of the document, offers dated lesson plans organized according to: (1) subject matter, (2) performance objective code number, (3) materials and aids, (4) material code, (5) approaches, (6) English or Spanish instruction, and (7) activities. (MW)

TO: ABE ADMINISTRATORS and ESL TEACHERS

This demonstration project represents a highly specialized adaptation of the materials and concepts developed last year by the state-wide committee charged with building a 1000 hour curriculum for ESL. This San Diego project providing occupationally oriented ESL contains no new material, no new methods of instruction, no new multimedia equipment.

ED 101 119

What, Then Is New? Something fundamental -- perhaps the one most significant element in bringing about a more effective instructional program in any subject or course - - - a pragmatic approach to the problem of teaching and learning - - - an initial assessment by the instructor of 20 students, fifteen men and five women, to determine first their capabilities in comprehending, speaking, reading, and writing colloquial English relating to (1) surviving in an English-speaking system, (2) understanding the world of work, and (3) English relating to appropriate occupational clusters . . . then a determination of the level of English proficiency necessary for each student to survive in the community and succeed in entering a job or job training program - - - finally, development by the instructor of a series of specific performance objectives leading directly toward taking the Spanish-speaking student from where he is to where he will need to be at the conclusion of the limited instructional program. This perhaps is new!

No instruction, no materials, no classroom activities should be included unless they contributed directly to the achievement of the performance objectives expected of the students at the end of the program. Concepts related to the world of work, employer/employee relations, labor unions, employee benefits, and safety should be taught in Spanish if this will bring about the necessary knowledge in minimal time and if such instruction in Spanish is more important to achieving the performance objectives than is an equivalent amount of time spent in teaching English.

Without the "performance objective" approach to instruction, this demonstration project could only have been a repetition of other ESL programs of varying degrees of excellence. With the performance objectives approach and with a competent instructor willing to adapt, or change, his instructional approach, this demonstration project did prove successful in providing the minimal skills in English necessary for Spanish-speaking men and women to qualify for entry-level employment or job training. This was done in 600 hours or less. More instructional time should be allotted, if possible.

To be successful, any replication of this project will require an experienced, competent ESL teacher who is willing to accept a new approach to instruction and who has the flexibility to find and to use those methods and techniques, materials, and multimedia equipment that will lead most directly to the achievement of the performance objectives required for his particular class.

URGENT NOTE

ED 002 865

This limited program, when successful, can only get the student ready for job training, OJT, or entry-level employment, mainly in semi-skilled occupations. Additional job related and community oriented ESL must be provided if the student is to achieve upward job mobility and effective participation in his community.

PREFACE

The California State Department of Education, recognizing the need for a vocationally oriented ESL program for job training and employment, initiated and funded a series of experimental projects in five districts of the state during the spring semester of 1971. This curriculum material was developed through the participation of the San Diego Community College Division of Adult Education in that project funded under Public Law 91-230, Adult Basic Education Act of 1966, as amended, and the California Plan for Adult Basic Education.

The following materials include a comprehensive account of the project, with information on the following:

- Budget and expenditures
- Class structure and student profiles
- Evaluations of student performance
- Written and oral tests
- Curriculum content organized into performance objectives
- Sequential presentation in daily lesson plans of the curriculum content
- Instructional materials and aids
- Teaching methods and activities
- Bibliography of textbooks, materials and equipment
- Evaluations and recommendations

Given the experimental nature of the project, the report should be studied, not as a fixed, standardized model, but as a useful guide to the continued development and conduct of future programs oriented to vocational ESL.

FORWARD TO TEACHERS

This special demonstration project in ESL for job training and employment differs from traditional adult ESL in its orientation toward survival and vocational English. Whereas traditional adult ESL prepares the student through a graduated movement from one level of standard English proficiency to another, this program is designed to provide the student first with those English language skills adequate to meet immediate survival needs in the community and second for job readiness, either in a vocational skills training program or an entry-level occupation. This is to be accomplished in 1000 hours or less. The 1971 demonstration project ran for only 600 hours of instruction. Given that limited period of time, we do not expect the students to achieve complete accuracy and fluency; only proficiency adequate to meet their needs in specific situations.

Instruction

The course curriculum is divided into three phases:

1. Survival English.
2. English for the world of work and selected occupational clusters.
3. English pattern usage.

These three phases are presented in terms of performance objectives. Periodically the students were tested (in oral and written form) to measure their mastery of these performance objectives. The daily lesson plans, student evaluations and tests presented in the report are all cross-referenced to a list of these basic performance objectives. (See section on Performance Objectives. S - Survival, W - World of Work, and E - English pattern usage.) All references are listed by code letter and number.

Instruction is given in both English and Spanish, with English predominating. Use of the bilingual method, when appropriate, can be very helpful in facilitating learning. Though instruction in Spanish should be held to a minimum, it is nonetheless useful in stimulating motivation, teaching abstract ideas, and structures, and providing orientation to the phases of survival English and the world of work. As student comprehension of English increases, the amount of instruction in English should increase accordingly.

Instruction in English pattern usage utilizes a multimedia approach to develop adequate language skills in the following sequence of priority: listening and understanding, speaking, and reading and writing. Students at the beginning level should spend approximately 75% of their time listening and speaking. Reading and writing should be limited to vocabulary and patterns already practiced extensively in oral drills. A prime objective throughout the course should be mastery of the English sound system; since to pronounce a sound correctly presupposes hearing it clearly. In ordinary conversation, a person does not hear sounds in isolation but rather sounds combined to form language patterns. Therefore, continued drills on listening and reproducing the proper intonation, articulation and rhythm of language patterns are necessary.

Objectives of the course are achieved through a regular sequence of activities beginning with oral practice of language patterns and progressing to controlled responses, free responses, role playing, and conversation. Neither vocabulary nor new grammatical structure should be presented out of context but always as a part of pattern practice.

The student must have listening and speaking control of each set of patterns before proceeding to the next learning sequence. Only through systematic review of previously taught patterns while the next sequence is in progress will the student be able to manipulate the patterns and achieve mastery. The teacher should find as many different ways of teaching the same thing as possible to provide the number of repetitions needed for mastery without boring the students. The following drill types are recommended:

1. Repetition drills.
2. Chain drills.
3. Appropriate response drills.
4. Substitution drills.
5. Question and answer drills.
6. Expansion drills.
7. Transformation drills.
8. Directed discourse drills.

The instructor should not limit himself to the methods of structural presentation found in text books. Ideally he should make appropriate selections from a variety of texts, supplemented and enriched by applicable multi-media materials and equipment. Drill patterns enlivened by visual aids and innovative methods and techniques all serve to facilitate the learning situation. However, abandoning the orderly succession of subject matter presented in any one text, places the responsibility for sequential development of the curriculum on the teacher which entails careful planning and selection.

Instruction in survival English adapts basic English patterns to the immediate needs of the student functioning in his community (see Performance Objectives - Survival English). Curriculum development for survival situations may include the following:

1. Selected materials from appropriate texts.
2. Teacher-prepared materials involving situational vocabularies, pattern drills, and dialogues.
3. Visual aids such as movies, film strips, charts, posters, signs, flashcards, pictures, applications and other forms supplied by various agencies.

The instructor should also arrange for lectures by agency representatives and conduct field trips to commercial and community service establishments and places of historical, cultural and recreational interest.

Instruction relating to the world of work adapts basic English patterns to vocationally oriented situations. Relevant materials in basic textbooks are limited in amount and quality. As a consequence heavy reliance is placed upon available training manuals, vocational pamphlets, visual aids and teacher-prepared materials. The most useful source to be found for curriculum development in the area of employment opportunities, applications, interviews and job preparedness is the Pre-Employment Training manual (see bibliography). Also useful in rounding out the curriculum are films, video tapes, mock job interviews and class consultations with vocational counselors.

When the student has decided upon a vocational field, essential vocabulary, terminology and situational dialogues in that field should be introduced. Complementary to this, it is highly desirable that the student directly observe and/or participate in an on-going training program in his prospective vocational field.

SUMMARY

The daily lesson plans of the report are intended to show the scope and sequential organization of the subject matter, materials and aids, teaching approaches and activities utilized in this project. As presented they can serve as a useful guide to the development and conduct of future programs. However, they are not to be followed as completed models for standardized application. Considerable variance exists in facilities, equipment and materials; in student entry-level proficiency, aptitudes, and needs. To be effective teachers must be able to work innovatively with the facilities and materials at hand. Moreover, they must be able to adapt their teaching methods and materials to meet the particular needs of each class group.

SPECIAL PROJECT

ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE FOR JOB TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT

INTRODUCTION

California has many residents who are unemployed or underemployed because of a foreign language background. To meet the needs of these men and women, it is imperative that a vocationally oriented ESL program be developed and implemented to supplement the effective but more general programs now offered. This "job readiness" ESL curriculum is planned to bring the student to a proficiency level in English adequate for entry into job training and/or entry-level employment in approximately 1000 hours of instruction.

Course content and instruction will be aimed toward meeting the needs of mono-lingual Spanish speaking men and women. A bilingual instructor with successful ESL experience will be assigned. A male teacher is desirable since a majority of students are expected to be men.

Course Content

Instruction in Spanish will be utilized as appropriate to create motivation and to provide orientation to the "world of work," employer-employee relationships, labor unions, social security and other benefits, money management and consumer education. Instructional time in Spanish will be held to a necessary minimum so that maximum time will be available for instruction in English. (Bilingual instruction is desirable in meeting the major course goals: (1) job readiness and (2) ability to function in either a vocational skills training program or an entry-level occupation.)

ESL Curriculum

Instruction in English will utilize a multi-media approach to develop adequate levels of student skills in (1) hearing and understanding English, (2) speaking English, and (3) reading and writing the language in this sequence of priority. The direct method of instruction will be used with maximum student involvement and with emphasis on appropriate drill and practice. Appropriate performance objectives will be established to measure student progress. Instruction will be organized into three phases:

- I. Survival English.
- II. English for the world of work.
- III. Basic English for selected occupational clusters.

ESL Curriculum (Continued)

Examples of performance objectives established, or being developed, in each of the above "phases" of instruction include:

I. Survival English:

The student will be able to understand and respond appropriately to questions regarding himself and his family, names, ages, relationship, place of residence, length of time in the United States and in San Diego, visa status, etc. The student will be able to understand and make appropriate response to questions and information regarding dates and time, directions and obtaining transportation within the community, housing, identification of money and prices of articles and services, parts of body and state of health, etc. The student will be able to converse in limited fashion regarding the above.

II. ESL Related to the World of Work.

The student will be able to understand and respond appropriately to questions and information related to applications for employment, introductions and simple job interviews, previous employment, education and training, special skills and interests, names and address of references. Performance in the above areas will include limited reading ability as well as oral comprehension and verbal response.

III. ESL Related to Selected Occupational Clusters.

At the time a vocational training program or entry-level job has been established for the student, essential vocabulary and terminology related to the job or training program will be added to the instruction. For example, the student must be able to understand verbal or simple written instructions regarding shop safety and the care and use of essential tools and equipment. The student will be able to read, understand, and identify names of tools, objects, materials, etc., necessary for the performance of his work tasks, etc. The student will be able to understand and respond to requests or instructions required for performing the various activities in his job or training program.

The above performance objectives are examples and are not a complete listing of the learnings and competencies to be achieved in the program either in general mastery of English or specific skills necessary for training and/or employment.

PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVES -- SITUATIONAL ENGLISH

S. Survival English

At the conclusion of 750 hours of ESL instruction, the student will be able to respond appropriately, by oral drill, conversation, actions, or by limited written form, in the following survival situations.

Code No.	Performance Objectives
-----------------	-------------------------------

S.1.	Self Identification
------	----------------------------

Give upon request, self identification and personal information as to: name, address, telephone number, place of birth, family, age, education, nationality, and previous employment.

S.2.	Greetings
------	------------------

To be able to give and exchange simple greetings and introductions:

- (a) Greetings: "hello, good morning, good afternoon, good evening, good-by, see you tomorrow, how are you?, fine, thanks."
- (b) Introductions: "may I present, how do you do?, very pleased to meet you."

S.3.	States of Being
------	------------------------

Describe personal states of being: I am tired, hungry, thirsty, sick, well, happy, sad, bored, nervous, sleepy.

S.4.	Telling the Time

STUDENT INFORMATION

Recruitment of Students

Twenty students, fifteen men and five women, were enrolled in the class. All but two were referred to us by the Welfare Department; the remainder were referred by the State Service Center, H.R.D. The Welfare Department provided transportation expenses, and for women, baby-sitting expenses. However, no other monetary incentive was provided over regular welfare payments.

Age-range and Educational Backgrounds (See profiles for further details)

The age range of students was from 24 through 50, the average age being 37. The average number of years of schooling completed in Mexico was six, ranging from one year to nine years.

Class Structure and Composition

Because of wide disparities in student aptitudes, preparation and language proficiency, the class was divided into three ability groups: I, low; II, middle; and III, high. Groups were referred to as I, II, and III in class and will be referred to similarly in this report. The relationship between entry-level proficiency and group placement was obviously decisive. Placement was accomplished by talking with the student to find out what course objectives he had already mastered. Questions of English pattern usage, personal identity, and work and training background were used.

After the first five weeks of class some adjustments were necessary. One student was moved from group III to group II, while five students were moved from group I to group II. Excessive absences did not affect the progress of people in group III as much as in groups I and II.

For the purpose of analyzing the relationship between the student's progress in the course and his entry level proficiency and background, statistical profiles of each student have been carefully recorded. (See Profile Sheets.) Information regarding age, level of education attained in Mexico, previous training and employment, present occupational goals, entry level English, and hours of attendance are given. From the data compiled, there are some tentative conclusions and correlations that can be drawn. First, the factor of age does not seem to be a decisive one in determining the student's English proficiency.

The level of education in Mexico, however, appears to be a significant factor as does previous training in English and exposure to English through employment.

EVALUATION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Composition of Class

The heterogeneous composition of the class as to background and language aptitude, make grouping a necessity. With three ability groups, a teaching assistant is an absolute essential and with two or more assistants, more individual needs of students could be met.

Hours of Classroom Instruction

Six consecutive hours of intensive language instruction is too long for people who are not accustomed to studying. Even the best students have a limited attention span. With frequent change of pace, and coffee breaks, we still reach a point of diminishing returns in the latter part of the day. Though the total number of hours of class instruction is an important factor, the distribution of those hours is an equally important consideration.

We would recommend (1) a shortening of the classroom instruction time to five hours a day, (2) after 2½ or three months of intensive class instruction, it would be desirable for students to participate on a part time basis in an on-going training program in their respective vocational fields, simultaneous with the ESL instruction.

Equipment

Multi-media equipment is valuable, as a teaching aid but does not substitute for a teacher. The use of any equipment should be well planned in advance usually as reinforcement of material already taught. No one piece of equipment should be used over thirty minutes at a time with any one group.

In this class, we have found the audio-flashcard reader machine to be useful in teaching vocational terminology. The video tape is beneficial in recording simulated interviews. Both tape recorders and the audio-flashcard reader help students in pronunciation and inflection. Films have very limited use because of the rapidity of dialogue. However, film strips and slides can be used to good advantage because the time can be controlled. The overhead projector seems to be distracting to students working with other media in the same room, but is a better media for presenting material than the chalk board.

Course Curriculum

Curriculum relating to community orientation, money management, and consumer education required less instructional hours than originally anticipated. The majority of the students, particularly those who have lived in the United States for some time, have a considerable understanding of the concepts involved.

The basic English pattern usage program needed constant reinforcement, however, particularly in encouraging oral participation in activities outside the classroom as well as in.

We would highly recommend as much individualized instruction as possible to allow each student to progress at his own level and in his own interest area. Tutorial aids would be helpful in implementation of individualized instruction perhaps more in ESL than in any other subject areas due to the necessity for a high percentage of oral participation on the part of the students.

Curriculum relating to the world of work was not sufficient. Development of more extensive vocational vocabularies for diverse occupational fields, English-Spanish instructional manuals, occupational dialogues, and pattern drills, and vocationally related audio-visual materials are needed. To meet this need we recommend special research and development of vocational-E.S.L. curriculum packages which organize objectives, methods and materials for instruction in a variety of occupational areas.
